Z51 includes Bilstien shock absorbers, which are yellow. His are black. Z51 includes B4P boost fan, the little forward fan in front of the condenser He doesn't say. B4P was a popular option by itself too. Presence of the fan is not Zspecific. Z51 has a faster steering ratio. Very difficult to know the difference unless you've driven enough of both ratios to know, but back to back, the difference is quite noticeable. Z51 wheel sizes are 8. ALL 84's have the 8. And the big one. Z51 has different springs. The springs have codes. The rear Z51 spring is an only spring. The code is on the LR side, on the bottom. It is easily observed. Usually on the bottom, RH outer side. I used to spot a 84 Z51's harsh ride without even being in it. Steering gear code AJ is the "slow" non-Z51 ratio. If you have 9. The wheels are dated inside them. They have to be removed from the car to read the dates. You have a base suspension, non-Z51 car. But that may be a blessing, as the 84 Z51 was a kidney bruiser. The fast steering is nice, however. When my ladyfriend and I were test driving Corvettes in early 85 prior to ordering and purchasing the one I still own today, we drove both Z51 and base cars. I wanted Z51 for our car just to get the steering ratio. To me, it makes a difference in how the car drives and feels. You have a very early On Early 84's, the cruise control servo was mounted ahead of the LF wheel, under the headlight when the hood is open. Later in production I don't recall exactly when the servo was moved to the above the battery location where it remained through There was a campaign to relocate the early cars' servos to the above battery location. I don't recall the reason for the campaign, but I believe it was because the servo was getting wet from water coming in the headlight door opening, and causing "issues". I'm curious whether your early car still has its servo in the forward position, or if it was changed in the campaign. I'm not sure if it was a "recall" or not. Any 84 built in 83 had the forward cruise servo. So yours has been moved. Most of them have been. I've only seen one 84 during Judging that still retained the forward position. Non-Z51 have 4 8. So the 9. Next time you have the wheels off, take a look at the dates. It's not a "code" at all. Not tough at all. If you want to learn more about your car than perhaps you want to know, take it to an NCRS Judging event. Your initial event is not "expensive". But the initial outing isn't expensive at all. Don't change anything else, just clean it and take it out. If you're interested, I'll put you in touch with someone local to you. Let me know, if interested. C4Shane said: Steering is one easy way to check if it is a Z51 or not, as this is not something that would normally be changed after shipment. Yes No 0.
